The present explanation, however, was imperatively called for, in justice to our readers, and to our own character, for consistency and plain dealing.

We are compelled to postpone our notices of Learned Societies; the paper on the past and present state of the Fine Arts in Ireland will form the leading article in our next Number; the subject is so important, that we thought it more advisable to defer it altogether for a week, than to treat it in a slight or insufficient manner. We have been so variously occupied, this week, with matters foreign to our natural occupation, that we must plead our hurry in apology, for the want of the variety and completeness we could wish. After this, when we have got regularly into harness, we trust we shall not be found wanting.

We shall not vapour one word about the high and authentic source from which our sketch of the Duke of Wellington is derived. The article will speak for itself, it is with feelings of no ordinary satisfaction, however, that we are permitted to announce the constant cooperation and support of the same vigorous and able writer. The Londoners will, no doubt, be surprised to find us turning into their own quarters, and doing for them what they would find it rather difficult to accomplish for themselves.

We have naturally selected the greatest Irishman of the age for the subject of our first essay; but the leading members of the bar, and of the other liberal professions, will occupy, from time to time, a place in our personal sketches.

For the numerous and convincing proofs evinced of warm and active interest in our success, we have to return to each and all, our best and warmest thanks. Amid the vexations and anxieties of Editorship, it cheers one's heart to meet the right hand of friendship and support stretched forth in pure sympathy and good nature, by the highly-gifted and the good. It is this that stimulates while it rewards exertion, and the example will not, we trust, be lost, nor the call remain unanswered, by the native talent of our country.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A certain fair Correspondent, whose initials reverse the terminational consonants of the alphabet, need not entertain any dread of savage treatment from the members of the Literary body she refers to. However lion-like on ordinary occasions, before the Ladies we can roar you, like Billy Bottom, as soft as a sucking pigeon. Like the gods of the heathen pantheon, however, even we are compelled to bow, sometimes, to the dictates of that stern arbiter, Necessity, which often makes wild work with the dainties that are bred in our book. To Cæsar, and Julius, and Charles Doyne Sillory, we owe our acknowledgments. To the first we shall address a private note of friendly advice, if he intimate a wish for it, by leaving his address in our letter-box.

Hakaf must test the antiquity of his relique, if he would have us enbalm it; it unused and pleased us, however. We are indebted to H. K.—His paper, with many others which we cannot now enumerate, is under consideration.

'New Editions, with important improvements.

Published this day,
A SYSTEM OF GEOGRAPHY, for the Use of Schools and Private Students; including also the Elements of Astronomy, an Account of the Solar System, and a Variety of Problems to be solved by the Terrestrial and Celestial Globes. By THOMAS EWING. 12th edition, thoroughly revised, greatly extended, and brought down to the present time; without any increase of price. 12mo. 4s. 6d. bound; or with nine Maps, 6s. 6d.

EWING'S NEW GENERAL ATLAS; containing distinct Maps of all the principal States and Kingdoms throughout the world: in which the most recent Geographical Discoveries are accurately delineated. An entirely new set of plates, and price much reduced. In royal 4to, 14s. half-bound; coloured outlines, 10s.; or, full-coloured, 18s.

The encouragement which these two distinct but closely-allied works have uniformly received, has induced the Author and Publishers to spare neither trouble nor expense in bringing the new editions to the utmost possible perfection. In both, the information has been corrected to the present day. All the territorial changes produced by the late revolutionary war in Europe, and by the recent contest in the East, have been introduced, as well as the leading facts brought to light by the numerous discoveries which the unwearied zeal of modern enterprise has effected in various parts of the world. In the collection and arrangement of the important materials derived from these sources, the utmost diligence has been employed, and a great variety of authorities has been consulted: Among whom may be mentioned PARRY, FRANKLIN, RICHARDSON, and HALL, for North America; HUMBOLDT, MOORE, HEN, and CALDWELL, for South America; DENHAM, CLAPPERTON, and CAMPBELL, for Africa; BURCKHARDT, MOORCROFT, COCHRANE, and CRAWFORD, for Asia; with many others whose adventurous footsteps have of late so much enlarged the boundaries of geographical knowledge. While thus attentive to accuracy and extent of information, a due regard has also been shown to external embellishment. The Maps have been re-engraved; and it is hoped, that, for beauty of execution and distinctness of delineation, they may challenge a comparison with the most esteemed and costly productions of the present day.

With these improvements, the ATLAS still preserves unimpaired the peculiar feature which has rendered the work so popular from the beginning—that, as an accompaniment to the GEOGRAPHY, it can be used with the greatest advantage, since the name of every place, mountain, river, lake, bay, cape, &c. mentioned in that work, is to be found in it; while, as a Consulting Atlas, it is equally well adapted for the library, or for general reference. Into the GEOGRAPHY various sets of Exercises have been introduced; much information has been added, chiefly with respect to the rivers; and the Pronouncing Vocabulary has been enlarged to more than double its former size. With these important additions and improvements, the Publishers now offer both works to the Public, confident that the claims of the present editions will not be overlooked, nor the labour attending them go unrewarded.

UNIVERSAL STENOGRAPHY, by W. HARDING, with seven illustrative Engravings.

Brevity, simplicity, and perspicuity are the things needful in Stenography, and the system before us wonderfully unites them. It also oversets that difficulty so much complained of, the vowel being liable to be mistaken one for the other, in consequence of the representative symbols being inefficient to distinguish them. Mr. Harding effects this by judiciously making their position relative to the consonants preceding or following them, and furnishing a key to complete and easy legibility."—See the Birmingham Journal.

"Of the different Systems of Stenography which have fallen under our notice, none has appeared to us to combine so many advantages as the one at the head of this notice. It is that of the late Mr. Taylor, improved by one of the gentlemen employed in reporting for this Journal. The excellent manner in which these reports are given, shews that, in his hands at least, the art has been brought to a great degree of perfection."—London Medical Gazette, October, 1829.

A COMPREHENSIVE GRAMMAR

OF Modern GEOGRAPHY AND HISTORY, for the use of schools, and private tuition, with Maps, Views, Costumes, &c. &c. By W. PINNOCK, Author of Pinnock's Catechisms, History of England, Rome, Greece, &c. &c.

London: printed for Poole and Edwards, late Scatter and Letterman, 12, Ave Maria Lane.

"Mr. PINNOCK'S Catechisms and other Publications have made his name universally known throughout the Country, as one of the most meritorious and successful authors in this department of Literature, who have ever directed their attention to inform the rising generation. The present volume is, in all respects, worthy of his name: it is well conceived, well arranged, diligently edited, and beautifully got up, at a very moderate cost. By mingling the attractions of history with the dry details of geographical science, the study is rendered pleasing and interesting. Ample intelligence is produced in the first instance, and then the learner is judiciously exercised by questions on the subjects as they occur. The maps are neat and accurate, and what we are equally inclined to praise as a marked improvement, the little views and costumes are not only highly ornamental, but impressively instructive."—Literary Gazette, August 16th, 1828.

This Selection is presented to the Public under an impression that it may be deemed to have adequately followed out the idea conveyed in its title, by collecting from the rich treasures of poetical genius, and almost exclusively of living writers, those productions most consonant to the taste of the fair sex, and such as might naturally be expected to be associated in the pages of a "LADY'S POETICAL ALBUM." The names of most of the authors are too well known to need any illustration. A number of ORIGINAL PIECES precede, and are interspersed throughout the selections of the volume.

THE OLIVE BRANCH, consisting of original communications in Prose and Verse, with a fine Portrait of the Rev. Dr. GORDON.

"This little volume has our approbation and our good wishes. It contains some excellent pieces, both in Prose and Verse, which reflect credit on their several authors, and will furnish useful and interesting instruction to the reader."—Christian Instructor, December.

"We can truly say that we should desire to put into the hands of our friends no book of its kind better calculated to lead their minds to a contemplation of the great truths of Christianity, or more capable of recommending those truths in all their pure simplicity and beauty. Its merits as a literary production may be judged, when we quote as contributors, James Montgomery, the Reverends David Russel, Edward Craig, Dr. Adam Clarke, Gilbert Wardlaw, John Brown, Dr. David Dickson, John Brown Patterson," &c. &c. —Glasgow Courier, December 10.
